

End Punctuation

Period.

Periods are the most common punctuation mark at the end of a sentence, indicating that the statement is neutral. They appear at the ending of a complete thought.

The end of a question is marked by a question mark. A question mark is required at the conclusion of every question.

The exclamation point is a punctuation mark that is frequently used after an interjection or exclamation to signify strong emotions or volume.

Proper Use of End Punctuation Examples and Nonexamples:

Examples:

"Today I need to go to the store to get groceries."

"Have you completed all of your school work?"

"I went bowling with my sister and we had so much fun!"

Nonexamples:

"Do you want something to drink."

"I want to go staking?"

"Can you get me something to drink!"